The Ir bill that would raise the negro in any respect—especially socially—to the posi-tion of the white man. If they are not our equals they have their "stars" to blame, not us. Parties cannot get the Irish vote by trying to degrade them, whether by ignorance or otherwise. Appeal to the reason of a real Irishman and is nothing new to relate in regard to our country elections. Of one thing we satisfied—there is not a negro tunsense, as he nor no other man, can com-mand one vote against their convictions. You may rest asone or two instances the whites are seeking the black vote. You may rest asand reasonable, and must say that to sured that Old Hardeman will, in Autalk of "Mr. Davis" commanding one gust, set the example which in November every county in the State ought to, sured that Old Hardeman will, in August, set the example which in November every county in the State ought to, and will, we hope, surely follow. The white race, in their place, foremost in rank, the exponents of all that is refined, educated and experienced; the colored people, free with all the privileges now given to them by the law, but second and politically dependent upon "white folks." But there is no use any longer of discussing this matter. The time for action is at hand, and the result all hangs upon ourselves. Defeat will come only from our own inaction. By the way, on this subject I wish to call your special attention to an elabor-ate and able statistical article in the last well-considered opinions of the editors is fully appreciated by the scribbler hereof. He hopes the valuable privilege is not abused by this protest against the fitness of the parallel drawn between the fitness of the parallel drawn betwee district. There is a silent,

Think of it!—over eleven thousand voters not even going to the polls in this single congressional district! I think this article should be reproduced ened to overcome the animal passions. Both attempt to justify their vagaries by the plea of "religious love," some puritanical conglomeration of psychological movement, unknown to the common run of humanity, evolved from the diabelical inner consciousness of Beecher, and recognized as an entity by the sympathetic Mrs. Tilton. The medieval lovers, Heloise and Abelard, did not attempt to justify their sin on any grounds, and put in no plea in extenuation. Both were young, beautiful, and to be sufficiently the sympathetic means a word to the wise. Have our papel lost all wisdom? Has apathy taken possession of our souls and driven out the spirit of principle and patriotism. Our chancery court has been in session during the past week, Chancelgrounds, and put in no plea in extendation. Both were young, beautiful, and full of genius. Beecher is not a young man, nor a genius. He is a man of taient, who peddies average notions, and retails other men's thoughts to advantage. In money matters he is said to be as mean as Lord Bacon. Intellectually he is a man of tact. That is all. Were as mean as Lord Bacon. Intellectually he is a man of tact. That is all. Were he a man of genius, he would boldly proclaim his anti-christian opinions instead of bissphemy covertly to a congregation who fondly thought he was expounding the bible to them. Were he a man of genius he would be found among the scientists, endeavoring to he a man of genius he would be round to vote for Livingston. The crop prospect is fair, though there is great want of rain in many parts of is great want of rain in many parts of the county. The cotton crop is, to this time, promising. The health of the county is most excellent—no sickness to mention. By the way, if Memphis can put fifty thousand dollars in a cotton factory, why can't she put same amount in our railroad? We will give her the cotton to manufacture, not one bale of which she now gets, and buy the manuwhich she now gets, and buy the manufactured goods, not one yard of which she otherwise will sell to us. But we she otherwise will sell to us. But we have harped upon this subject until wearied, and will now have to look to other sources to build the road to and where we please. The comet has disappeared from our vision, but may still be vouchsafed to you, as you have a wider and more extended horizon. We are gratified at the selection of this place for the congressional convention.
